No Disruptions to TOTE Maritime's Twice-weekly Service to Alaska Due to COVID-19

Anchorage, Alaska – COVID-19 has not disrupted TOTE Maritime Alaska's twice-weekly service to Anchorage. As scheduled, the North Star will arrive Sunday, March 15 and the Midnight Sun on Tuesday, March 17. Future sailings will also continue as scheduled. TOTE Maritime Alaska is following the government's COVID-19 updates closely and remains committed to providing safe and reliable service during this dynamic and rapidly changing environment.

On Friday, March 13, TOTE Maritime Alaska announced that it is implementing proactive measures to mitigate risks for the health and well-being of TOTE employees and their ability to service customers, while keeping critical supply chains open and reliable. These measures include supporting social distancing efforts and limiting exposure to our vessel crews. In addition, TOTE has thorough business continuity plans and is in close contact with local, state and federal officials to be prepared for any possible situation.

"TOTE Maritime Alaska is closely monitoring all Coronavirus alerts, and we remain committed to our customers with safe and reliable service," said Grace Greene, President of TOTE Maritime Alaska. "Continuing to deliver cargo to Alaska is our priority, while making sure we follow all safety and health recommendations."

TOTE has been in contact with government officials in Alaska, reassuring them there will be no disruption to TOTE's critical cargo transportation.

TOTE Maritime Alaska provides twice-weekly cargo service between Tacoma and Anchorage aboard its two Orca class, built-for-Alaska vessels. TOTE is celebrating its 45th year of serving Alaska.
